WHAT MILADY WEARS

AT LAST the dictates of fashion tend toward easiness, for, following an era of much draped and altogether untailored street suits, with their wide ill-fitting sleeves and narrow-restricted skirts, the trotteur of the moment expresses the soberer ideas of the present season, and the jackets are either Norfolk or tend toward military.

The severely tailored boyish Norfolk seems to be especially favored for walking, and when worn with the trig little blouses of the moment and the correspondingly severe hat proves most attractive. Miss Phoebe Williams Adams is one of the younger girls who has adopted a Norfolk for walking. Miss Adams' suit is dull brown rough cloth, the skirt cut quite plain and the jacket belted in at the waist. With this she wears a snowy white Angora muffler and light spats and a black hat trimmed solely with two brown quills. A becoming turtleneck is being worn by Mrs. Samuel Bell, Jr. The material is of tweed in a dark blue and green plaid, and the suit is quite simply cut, the jacket being belted in at the waist line in Norfolk effect. With this Mrs. Bell wears a small close fitting black hat edged with fox and a muff and stole of fox. Miss Cecile Howell has also adopted one of these suits for morning wear. The material is of deep cinnamon red and black checked material, and has small plaits grouped at each side of both the jacket, which is belted, and the skirt. With this costume Miss Howell wears a black tricorper hat. Her sister, Miss Beatrice Howell, also looks well in a two-piece suit of brown tweed with which she wears a small black sailor. Miss Ruth Cox is wearing a severely plain suit of seal brown cloth, the costume being set off by huge neckpiece and muff of silver fox.

The top coat has this season proved more indispensable than ever, and Dame Fashion has evolved many attractive variations of this most useful garment. Mrs. Gardner Cassatt is wearing a good-looking three-quarter length coat of tete de negre velours, the necessary fullness at the hem being obtained by the circular bounce. The collar and cuffs of the coat are of beaver fur.
